

Human Rights

United Kingdom

August 2018

Human rights standards provide vital protection for older people by helping to change practice and procedure, culture and attitudes, and offering redress when breaches of human rights have taken place.

Many older people experience infringements of their human rights in later life. This can take the form of abuse and degrading treatment; unwarranted deprivation of liberty in the social care setting; loss of autonomy; lack of protection for family and private life; and routine discrimination. Often these human rights breaches are not recognised as such. For example, not being given proper help with eating or drinking contravenes the right to be free from inhuman or degrading treatment; detaining and deporting members of the Windrush generation was a contravention of their right to liberty and their right to family life.

Key statistics

1 million

Older people have difficulty with daily living activities such as eating, bathing and taking their medication, severely limiting their ability to live independently and with dignity.

Abuse, neglect, and acts of omission

Can occur when staff are inadequately trained, poorly supervised, have little support from management, or work in isolation resulting in treatment that is degrading and inhuman.

Deprivation of liberty

For many older people who lack mental capacity, restrictive care or treatment is being sanctioned as a first measure rather than as a measure of last resort, with many older people being unlawfully deprived of their liberty in care and health settings through a misuse of measures available under mental capacity legislation.

Human Rights, United Kingdom
August 2018

Human rights legislation¹

Human rights legislation, in the shape of the Human Rights Act 1998 (HRA) and the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), offers older people a valuable means of challenging and remedying these infringements. For example, on several occasions residents have challenged home closures on the basis that the authority has not taken into account how their right to life or right to respect for private life would be affected.

In recent years the HRA has been criticised, with claims from some quarters that it gives some people too many rights and prevents the state from taking reasonable action. In response to these views the Government made a commitment in its 2010 General Election manifesto to repeal the HRA and replace it with a British Bill of Rights.

Age UK's position is that it is in the best interests of older people to maintain and strengthen the HRA. The existing legislation provides a strong foundation for preventing abuses of older people's rights and should be improved and strengthened.

In Northern Ireland, under the terms of the Belfast (Good Friday) Agreement 1998, the NI Human Rights Commission was asked to advise on a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. Age NI supports a strong and inclusive Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. This should include rights supplementary to those in the ECHR, reflect the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland and have recognisable gains for the most vulnerable in our society.

It continues to be a matter of serious concern across the UK that not all older people are accorded the protections of the HRA. Users of regulated care services who are paying for their own care are particularly at risk (unless their care has been arranged by a local authority or in Northern Ireland, Health & Social Care Trust).

"Any future human rights legislation must protect the rights and freedoms in the European Convention on Human Rights", Age UK, After the EU Referendum: Policy priorities for older people 2016

Brexit

The UK's withdrawal from the EU will not automatically affect the UK's status as a signatory to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). The ECHR is an international treaty distinct from the EU treaties and EU Charter on Fundamental Rights.

UK citizens are still able to rely on their rights in the ECHR in domestic courts and can still take cases to the European Court of Human Rights. In addition, they are protected by the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. However, they will no longer be able to rely on the European Charter of Fundamental Rights (CFR) which in particular includes many wider social and economic rights, such as the rights to fair and just working conditions, to healthcare and to have personal data protected.

Human Rights, United Kingdom
August 2018

Open-Ended Working Group on Ageing

Under a mandate from the UN General Assembly, the purpose of the Open-Ended Working Group on Ageing (OEWGA) is to strengthen the protection of the human rights of older people. It has a mandate to examine the existing international framework in relation to the human rights of older people, and to identify possible gaps and how best to address them, including through considering the possibility of new human rights instruments. Since December 2012, OEWGA has been considering, under a mandate from the UN General Assembly, the need for a Convention on the rights of older persons.

Age UK and Age International firmly believe that a UN Convention on the rights of older persons would provide a framework and focus to guide policy responses to ageing based on rights, equity and social justice. It also has the potential to create a shift from older people being considered as passive recipients of welfare, to older people as active rights holders and to reduce the level of abuse, neglect and discrimination experienced by many older people.

There are large gaps in the international standards that allow older people's rights to be largely ignored. This is undermining progress in terms of older people being treated with dignity and respect, can shut them out of decision-making and can lead to further abuses of their human rights in all areas of life.

A new international convention for older people would transform how governments and citizens respond to the rapidly evolving needs of older people globally.

Public Policy Proposals

- Any future human rights legislation must protect the rights and freedoms in the European Convention on Human Rights and must not undermine the effectiveness or scope of the Human Rights Act 1998 (HRA) or the potential for enforcing it across the United Kingdom.
- Governments must ensure that the national human rights institutionsⁱⁱ have the powers, constitutional independence and sufficient resources to encourage equality and diversity, eliminate unlawful discrimination, and protect and promote the human rights of everyone in the United Kingdom.
- There is an urgent need to reframe the debate on human rights, emphasising the valuable protection it provides to older people when they may be at their most vulnerable. Governments, national human rights institutions and civil society should place a high priority on promoting awareness, understanding and protection of human rights, in relation to older people.
- Governments, national human rights institutions, and civil society organisations should all seek to influence public bodies to take a human rights based approach to their work, ensuring that all of their policies and procedures are framed with reference to human rights.
- The Government must extend HRA protections to all older people by ensuring that all providers of regulated care services are regarded as public authorities for the purposes of the Act, regardless of who is funding the service provided.
- Governments must continue to be global leaders in the promotion and protection of the rights of older people by playing a positive and active role in the United Nations Open-Ended Working Group on Ageing, encouraging the development of new human rights instruments for protecting the rights of older people, including the possibility of a new Convention.
- A distinct Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland should be developed to conform with the provisions of the Belfast /Good Friday Agreement. Age NI supports a strong and inclusive Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland, which should include rights supplementary to those in the ECHR, reflect the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland and have recognisable gains for the most vulnerable in society.

Human Rights, United Kingdom
August 2018

Want to find out more?

Age UK has agreed policy positions on a wide range of public policy issues. Our policies cover money matters, health and wellbeing, care and support, housing and communities. There are also some crosscutting themes, such as age equality and human rights, age-friendly government and information and advice

Further information

You can read our policy positions here;

<https://www.ageuk.org.uk/our-impact/policy-research/policypositions/>

Individuals can contact us for information or advice here; <https://www.ageuk.org.uk/informationadvice/> or call us on 0800 169 8787

Further information

ⁱ UK human rights legislation covers the whole of the United Kingdom but enforcement is devolved.

ⁱⁱ The Equality and Human Rights Commission, the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission, the Equality Commission in Northern Ireland and the Scottish Human Rights Commission.